ENDANGERED, VULNERABLE, PROTECTED

TOOTS ZYNSKY's ongoing exploration of bird populations all over the world has once again produced a broad spectrum of works relating to birds in varying degrees of decline — from the South African Desert to the Amazon Rain Forest, Indian sub-continent, North America, Australia and beyond — in large part due to human interruptions of habitat and climate. We all know this story. We can all do something about it. The most fragile beautiful creatures on earth depend on us, now more than ever. The intentional pairs of Whopping Cranes — one of North America's most endangered species, ..... their extraordinary paired "dances". Ravens, most usually travel in pairs, and although not yet considered endangered, are officially "protected" and have significance in many cultures, including those of our Indigenous Americans.
